PHOTOLUMINESCENT WALL SYSTEM

Designed to assist in emergency evacuation, the photoluminescent system outputs photoluminescent technology for its light source. The system also includes tactile indicators which have a distinctive shape to indicate the location of the exit, and is located on walls at waist height so that children, wheel-chair users can reach it - a must for all escape route marking. And because it does not require conventional visual signage, it conforms to the Disability Discrimination Act.

Unlike the electroluminescent system, no power supply is required for this system, just natural light and is therefore very cost effective. In the event where there is a loss of power, the system will glow brightly for a period in excess of one hour.

The tactile indicators show the location of the nearest emergency exit, giving visually impaired and blind people more confidence in finding their way out of a building in an emergency evacuation. They are also of benefit to normal sighted people in smoky or dark conditions when disorientation might take hold.

If you are a Building Manager and responsible for the safe evacuation of all building users, including those who are visually impaired or blind, you have now a new safety product which allows blind and visually impaired people to take more responsibility for their own safety, reducing the reliance on other people for assistance.

Not only does this system provide an effective evacuation measure for visually disabled people, it also demonstrates a clear commitment to the health and safety of all building users.

Find out how this system could generate income for you, and pay for itself, via the AdRail link.

The photoluminescent wall system for buildings comprises of three basic elements:
