Describe what happened:

A young male cyclist was travelling north on the maintenance track adjacent to the guideway when he and his bicycle fell into the guideway. A bus, travelling in the same direction, was approaching the location and the driver noticed the hazards and applied the bus's brakes. The action was sufficient to bring the bus to a halt a few feet short of the stricken cyclist, although a passenger was thrown from their seat near the front of the bus as a result of the braking. An ambulance response was mobilised for the bus passenger who, it was thought, had sustained back injuries after being thrown from their seat. The male cyclist reportedly sustained only minor injuries, and left the scene shortly afterwards. The injured passenger was initially treated on the bus for their injuries, before the bus was taken up the track to the next road junction where the injured passenger was transferred to a waiting ambulance for onward transportation to the nearest hospital
