Dear

Thank you for your email below.

I can confirm that Westminster City Council in partnership with Transport for London is supporting the implementation of the Central London Cycle Grid.

Proposals for the Quietway Camden Town to Little Venice, which travels along Bloomfield Road, Aberdeen Place, Lyons Place, Fisherton Street and Frampton Place were consulted on in Spring of 2015 and can be viewed at the following website: https://www.westminster.gov.uk/quietway-route-camden-town-little-venice.

Included in these proposals was the recommendation to make Bloomfield Road two-way for cyclists and to make improvements to the connection along Delamere Terrace. We are currently further developing the proposals and I will keep you informed of any progress.

Regards,

Subject: cycling in London

Dear Westminster Council,

I am a cyclist and often cycle along the canal from Westbourne Park to Regent's Park. However, there is one part of this journey that is quite difficult for cyclists. It starts on Delamere Road, which is one way, over the bridge at Westbourne Terrace and onto Blomfield Road, which is also one way. This means that many cyclists have to cycle on the pavement on Delamere Road, and then very carefully on Blomfield Road, going the wrong way. This is potentially dangerous (and illegal, yes) but to avoid this would mean going a very long way out of the way. This part of the canal towpath is impossible to cycle on, as there are too many barriers, which is why cyclists go on the road for this stretch. If there were a way to either allow cyclists to properly cycle along the canal (remove the barriers) or to create a cycle lane on these 2 oneway streets, that would really make a huge difference.

Thanks for looking into this for me - please let me know if there is another department I should contact about this instead?
