F (17/08) 270722-3 Student Demographics-RESPONSE

The University is able to advise you that some of the numbers involved are five or fewer. The University does not disclose publicly personal data, including not just names, but also other information which identifies, or might lead, together with other information which is in the public domain (or may otherwise be available) to the identification of individuals, or to the disclosure of personal information about individuals.

This is particularly the case where very low numbers are involved, and accordingly other information may also have been withheld for this reason.

Such information has been withheld under the exemption for personal data in section 38(1)(b) of the Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002. Where very low numbers of staff or students are concerned, and the institution itself is relatively small, it is accordingly easier to discover their identities. The University needs to ensure that identification of individuals, and the disclosure of their personal data, is not thereby directly or indirectly revealed.
